Then, if you'd rushed into the street, you would have seen her hat sticking cut of the window of a rapidly disappearing Chambers st. car. And if you'd rushed down to the ferry, you might have got there just in time to catch aglimpse of her hanging over the rail of the Goshen, bound for Jersey City. And if, still persisting, you'd taken the next boat over, you would phobably have reached Erie Station just in time to see her waving good-by from the car window as the Englewood express pulled out of the yards.

And if—but, no, the trains don't run frequently enough for that. Still, you might imagine you did take the next train and arrived in Tensafty just in time to see her, beaming with smiles, as she rode away from the station in a big stage with "Happy Land" Girls' Haven.
